APTECH SYSTEMS, INC. ANNOUNCES GAUSS 6.0 for Mac OS X!

MAPLE VALLEY, WA – July 28, 2005 – In response to overwhelming customer demand, Aptech Systems, Inc., has ported the GAUSS 6.0 Mathematical and Statistical System™ to Apple's MacOS X. Compatible with both "Panther" (10.3) and Apple's new operating system "Tiger" (10.4), GAUSS allows the scientific and mathematical community to harness the outstanding 64-bit processing power of the PowerPC G5 architecture for its toughest computational problems.

Built from the ground up with Apple's Cocoa technology, both Macintosh and longtime GAUSS for Windows users will be delighted to learn that while GAUSS for MacOS X retains all the features and workflow of the Windows version, it has been reengineered in subtle ways to provide a look and feel that is completely natural for Macintosh users. In addition to all of the features of the Windows version, GAUSS for MacOS X provides:

- A powerful new source-code editor

- Unlimited customizable toolbars
- Fully integrated UNIX/Terminal command-line support
- A visually stunning icon and graphics set that complements Apple's Aqua interface

Additionally, GAUSS for MacOS X provides all of the robust computational features that have become its hallmark, including:

- Optimization
- Estimation and model fitting
- Linear algebra factorization and decomposition
- Long period random numbers
- Statistical distribution functions
- Structures and N-dimensional arrays

Built in conjunction with Balance Software Corporation, a leading developer of Macintosh software, GAUSS for MacOS X is available immediately! For information, contact:
